Basketball: the name of the game is recruiting

by Herb Buhl

There is little mystery to building a successful major college basketball program. The only thing one has to do is recruit the most talented high school basketball players year in and year out and coach them into playing as a team. One merely has to look at this year's NCAA finalists to see that. Recruiting, however, has become an extremely tough business and becomes even more competitive each year. There are basically three factors upon which a successful basketball program can be built, (a) the coach and his reputation, either past or present--present as a winner or past for his known contact with the pros (since most quality high school prospects yearn to become pros)--(b) other players because once one attracts a few All-Americans others who want to play with them on a successful team will follow and (c) the college and/or the conference affiliation including considerations such as the size and location of the school, the teams competed against and, of course, the strength of the particular conference.

The ability to recruit all-star prep athletes and mold them into a cohesive, balanced championship team is no easy task. The competition for these prep All-Americans is fierce. In fact, it is not at all uncommon for a high school All-American Basketball prospect to be contacted by 200-300 colleges and universities seeking his services.

To give an example of the intensity, Joey Goldenberg, the high school coach of Gene Banks (a consensus All-American), received fifty (50) letters wooing Banks before he ever played his first varisity game at West Philadelphia High School and that's only the ninth grade!

The chances of a talented prep player going unheralded and unnoticed these days is almost unheard of. You seldom hear anymore about a star basketball player showing up at tryouts and earning himself a "walk-on" scholarship as has sometimes happened in the past or as it still sometimes occurs in other sports, particularly football.

Today there are even national scouting services which help colleges recruit the top high school basketball players. In fact, there are three such services: Dave Bones' Cage Scope of Toledo, Ohio; Howard Garfinkel's High School Basketball Illustrated in Sunnyside, N.Y.; and Bill Cronauer's B.C. Scouting Service in St. Petersburg, Florida, which count among their clientele almost every major college program.

These "superscouts" have intricate rating systems of the high school player, updates throughout the year on his progress and include grades and other data. Farfinkel uses a star rating system and his five-star rating is often the final word among college coaches reliable opinions on each player featured. Garfinkel specializes in the East and personally sees the players he writes up. Garfinkel, considered the "guru" of prep basketball, also runs four weeks of summer camps in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, with 270 players going through each week including some 100 major college players. These sessions are a showcase for when recruiting a prospect. Dave Bones comments on the abilities of about 2,000 players a year, personally seeing 10-15% in action, and getting at least three college recruiters to see some of the best prep talent around.

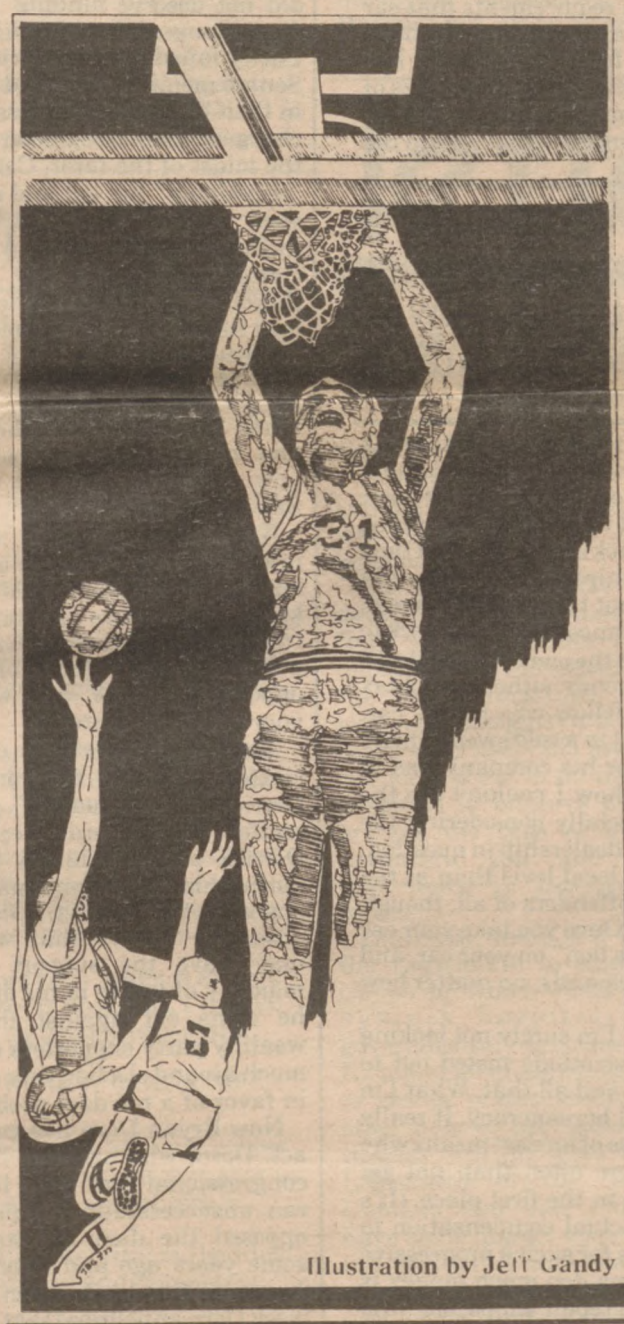

Illustration by Jeff Gandy

"...Often times the signing of a single All-American prospect can make a recruiting season, and indeed, hold the regular season in the balance. In the final analysis, it is recruiting that makes a program go from rags to riches, or just from rags to rags..."

Nor is recruiting for the faint-hearted. It involves months and miles of travel and endless hours of visits, contacts and scouting. It is not something that a coach can do only once a year, when a prospect reaches his senior year and/or attains super-star status. For example, Stu Aberdeen, Tennessee's super-recruiter until he took the head job at Marshall this year, had reportedly been courting 6'9" All-American Wayne McKoy for the last five years. Since McKoy was 6'4" when he was 14 years old, Aberdeen was not the only one to realize McKoy's potential. McKoy, of course, signed with St. John's despite such efforts. This story is not uncommon, as recruiting has become an endless year round task.

Coaches can be satisfied with the success of their recruiting season when they get the "blue chip" prospect to sign a national letter of intent. But there are disappointments as well. As Coach Lee Rose of UNCC recently told the Charlotte Observer:

"What hurts most is to say goodbye to a prospect knowing he has been impressed with his visit, knowing he likes your school and his chances to play. Then you get the letter or telephone call, or maybe nothing at all and you learn he has gone somewhere else. Why? You ask yourself, 'what did we do wrong?' Every basketball coach in the country experiences it."

The Sporting News recently obtained the views of two of college's greatest coaches on the problem of recruiting today. Hank Iba, who chalked up 767 victories at Oklahoma State, was the first coach to win back-to-back NCAA championships (1945-46) and was the only man to repeat as Olympic Basketball Coach (1964, 1968, and 1972). He had this to say:

"It's much harder to coach today and the main reason is you spend so much time recruiting that you neglect the teaching of fundamentals. Now you have a limited time to coach (practices start Oct. 15), whereas we used to be able to start when school did. This puts a premium on getting the best possible athlete. Recruiting must be done by the staffs and the alumni-but the latter is a ticklish situation. The evil in competitive sports, if any evil exists, comes from over-zealous alumni. The coach today not only has to recruit but he also has to educate the alumni-and that's tough to do."

Coach Adolph Rupp finished his career at Kentucky with 874 victories for an incredible .821 winning percentage spanning 41 seasons. The man who coached Kentucky to four NCAA championships had this to say:

"Basketball at one time was a coaching thing. Today basketball is a recruiting proposition, something you can easily surmise by reading the sports pages about the great athletes in high school and the schools that have been there to recruit them."

"The schools that have been successful are the ones that have taken the outstanding boys. It's vicious, far more vicious than it was when I was coaching."

Son of 'Living Nightmares'

It's often said that rape victims are made to feel responsible for having been raped; that our judicial bureaucracy places the burden of being raped upon the woman who was raped. Well, I know the feeling. For after having been the innocent victim of an auto accident, it is I who am in debt, and it is I, not the fellow whose negligence caused the wreck, who has to endlessly hassle with the insurance people, the car repair people, lawyers, magistrates, ad infinitum. And even after weeks of such hassles, I have still not recovered my loss.

You see, there's a great fallacy in South Carolina's auto insurance laws. It is that the very people who are most likely to maim or kill innocent people by their reckless driving are often the same people who get away with not having any insurance at all. I've encountered such people twice in the last six months. The first time I was waiting at a stop light on Green Street, when this halfwit rear-ended my car. Well, it turned out he was driving a rental car and he had no insurance. Given that the deductible is $100 anyway, he merely said all he had was $20, and I had to threaten to wring his neck to even get that amount, which was less than half the cost of the damage he caused, assuming I did the repairs myself. The jerk got off scot-free.

The second time was several weeks ago, and that accident was the subject of the "Living Nightmares" column (April 22). To refresh your memory, it occurred as I was turning into my driveway; I looked in the mirror and saw a car racing toward mine, and I hurriedly pulled off the road, but the driver of the other car had bad reactions and pulled off too and sent my car careening into some woods.

Well, it turned out that the fellow who hit me was a rather unsavory type, who lied about his lack of car insurance (despite state requirements that car owners be insured), and tried to evade me and the insurance company for days after the accident. Meanwhile, since he lives not too far from where I do, he has sent his teenaged minions to tear down the mailbox (twice) and throw bags of trash on the estate where I live. (Course, if he sets foot on the estate, he's likely to get his head blown away--you can't count on law enforcement out here in the sticks).

> "...Those of more modest means who become victims, whether of crime or accidents, more often than not get screwed far worse than those who caused them harm in the first place..."

The final result was that my insurance company had to pay the $1,000 it took to fix my car, but still I ended up owing $300. I had it towed to a local auto dealership, and they did a good job on the body, but of course they broke some things in the process and they screwed up the electrical wiring and they failed to repair the front end. So I ended up having to take it back and forth, each time begging friends to give me rides to and from the dealership (car insurance only pays for a rental car till the car is "officially" fixed, not till it's really fixed). And I had to come up with $300 in addition to the insurance company check to get the car back from the repair shop. Yes, and I went to the owner himself and asked if I could have three weeks to come up with the money, either from a tax refund or from an attachment on the property of the fellow who hit my car. Well, the owner's jowls trembled and he almost broke out in a cold sweat when I made the request. It was impossible, he explained, for his company had to write off $11,000 in 1971 after granting credit. Somehow I couldn't see the connection between that $11,000 and my $300, especially considering the tremendous cash flow of a local monopoly such as the dealership in question. (Monopoly is perhaps a more serious problem at the local level than at the national level, and car dealers are perhaps the worst offenders of all, though medical doctors give them a good run for their money. Once you take your car in to be fixed, it's theirs. A car dealer has a "mechanic's lien" on your car, and he owns it until you come up with whatever sum he demands, no matter how outrageous.)

As I explained in the "Living Nightmares" column, I'm surely not looking for sympathy. I'm just reporting on the endless frustrations meted out to people like me, who don't have the money for lawyers and all that. What I'm really pointing out is the great injustice of our judicial bureaucracy. It really does favor the rich, if you didn't already know. And those of modest means who become victims, whether of crimes or accidents, more often than not get screwed far worse than those who caused them harm in the first place. (It's good that the Carter administration is advocating actual compensation to victims of violent crimes; but it will take many decades for such a progressive idea to reach fruition way down here in South Carolina--too much money is now being made by the lawyers, insurance firms, auto repair shops, etc. who profit from the system as it is).

I suppose I should have interviewed the state insurance commissioner for this column, and maybe I should have pored over the insurance laws. Yet what matters is not what the laws state, but how they operate in real life. And all I can say is that I don't know when I'll see the end of that damned accident, nor when I'll be out of the financial straits it has put me in, nor when, if ever, I'll recover my loss.

The ironic thing is that I've driven a car since I was 14, and until I moved to Columbia in 1975, I had prided myself on the fact that I had never been in an auto accident. Now mind you, I had driven for years on the hectic streets of Manhattan, on the freeways of New England, down through the west and into Mexico. I have driven with the Kamikaze drivers of Bogota, and I have driven Czechoslavakian cars on the narrow roads of the high Andes. Nothing ever happened. But since I've been in Columbia, I've been hit three times, two times seriously. What in the hell is the matter with this place?

Damned if you do, Dammed if you don't

Dorn

Somewhere on his trip from obscure Congressman to courageous public servant, Third District Rep. Butler C. Derrick has stalled.

After three years of quiet support of the Russell Dam project, now being constructed in his district, Derrick surprised environmentalists and dismayed a good-sized chunk of his constituency when he announced several months ago he would take a "new look" at the $300 million boondoggle.

As you will undoubtedly recall, Russell Dam was included on President Carter's "hit list" of federal water projects which the administration felt did not deserve funding. The screams from Congress were quick in coming. Carter failed to consult with House and Senate members who had such projects in their districts, Congressional leaders charged. The honeymoon was over. In the midst of the furor, Carter agreed to "reevaluate" his list and new hearings were held on some of the projects, including Russell Dam. About the time Carter announced his plan for a thorough analysis, Derrick announced that he too would take another look.

Carter made his final decisions in mid-April, and Russell Dam remained [illegible] hand, has still not reached a decision, and many observers believe Derrick now regrets opening his mouth in the first place.

"He's been supplied with enough information to fill a pick-up truck," one knowledgeable source told Osceola. "He knows all there is to know. His continuing indecision is based purely on political considerations now. Is opposition to the dam worth risking your political future?"

Although a Derrick congressional staffer says mail has run in favor of Derrick's "reevaluation" position, the staffer said several weeks ago that Derrick would definitely be in trouble during his 1978 campaign if he finally opposed the project. Other political observers believe that while Derrick may have the support of a slight majority of voters in his district should he come out against the dam, the wealthy party supporters who mean so much around election time are generally in favor of a pro-dam position.

Now Bryan Dorn has gotten into the act. Dorn, who held the Third District congressional seat until 1974 when he ran unsuccessfully for governor, once opposed the dam but was converted some years ago and is now a leading deacon in the dam's amen corner. This week Dorn announced that he might run again for governor--or he might just decide to give Butler a run, unless Derrick decides to "get right" with God, Dorn, and the rural electric co-ops.

Dorn told Columbia's WIS radio he wouldn't think of challenging Derrick if Derrick gave his full support to the dam, but "I do feel very deeply about the dam...I would hate to see that go down the drain."

Derrick said in March that while Carter's final decision on Russell Dam would not necessarily be his own, he would give very serious consideration to the President's point of view. After Carter's no-go decision, dam opponents throughout the state expected Derrick to follow suit and were prepared to hail the Congressman as a public servant with the courage to stand behind his convictions. Now some are afraid that Derrick, already nervous about the antagonism he's stirred up back home may cave-in under the pressure of Dorn's blackmail gambit and start attending prayer meeting again.

Syntric saga

While Syntric, Inc., a textile mill started by Circuit Judge William Howard Ballenger and several other Oconee county residents was beginning to flounder (Osceola, April 15) another company started by the same individuals, was in the process of applying for a Small Business Administration (SBA) loan.

Gregory Mills, Inc., formed by Ballenger and Syntric partners James Burgess and Jack Hunt, was granted a $150,000 loan by the SBA on April 9, 1974, shortly after the first suits were filed against Syntric. SBA representatives say the loan was granted for the purpose of equipment purchase and operating capital.

"Approximately $100,000 was allocated for equipment purchase with the other $50,000 designated for working capital," Halleck A. Butts, regional counsel for the SBA, told Osceola.

According to Butts the loan was secured by collateral consisting of equipment, fixtures, inventory and accounts receivable, and was a guranteed loan with Bankers Trust actually making the loan to the company and SBA guaranteeing 90 percent of the amount.

The loan was also guaranteed by a second mortgage on Burgess's home in the amount of $100,000.

"The other partners in the corporation also jointly and severally guaranteed the other $50,000," Butts said.

Butts said the procedure was not unusual even though Burgess's home was not valued at $100,000.

"Basically this serves as a guarantee rather than any sort of security or collateral," Butts said.

In December of 1974 Bankers Trust signed its interest in the loan over to the SBA indicating Gregory Mills may have defaulted on payment of the note. An official answer as to whether the company actually defaulted is prohibited from being released to the public under the provisions of the Privacy Act, even though the SBA is dispensing public funds. The signing over of the note could, however, indicate a default according to Butts.

"Generally speaking the transfer takes place when the loan is in default," Butts said.

Butts said at the time the loan was issued the amount was "adequately secured" by equipment and inventory, but nine months later, when the bank transferred its interest there had been a "substantial drop in value" in the collateral.

Butts said two things could account for the drop, the bleak economic prospects at the time, and the possibility that the second valuation was one of auction value rather than market value.

In March of the following year Burgess obtained an SBA release of the second mortgage on his home for payment of $10,000; again Butts said this was not unusual.

"That amount most likely represented what we though we could get for the house if we had to foreclose and sell it," Butts said.

But even though the company may have defaulted, the SBA was apparently not left holding the bag. In June of 1975 the loan was bought by Walhalla Mills, Inc. in consideration of a note and guarantee of payment by AVC Corporation, Walhalla Mills' parent company. During Osceola's questioning of SBA officials, an attorney for AVC, headquartered in Charlotte, was present in the office and making notes on the questioning.

The attorney denied there was any relationship between Walhalla Mills and Gregory Mills and said Walhalla Mills did not "buy out" Gregory as one of Osceola's sources had claimed. James Burgess is, however, the plant manager for the Walhalla Mills operation. Whether or not Walhalla Mills is making payment on the loan is again a matter which is exempt from disclosure.

Although SBA guidelines state "indepth consideration shall be given to the experience and capability of management," when considering loan candidates; the SBA issued a loan, which apparently was in default 10 months later, to a company whose managers were at the same time managing another company which was floundering and already had defaulted on loans. To date no one has been able to answer why.

Pays to hustle

"It pays to advertise," so the old saying goes. And it's got to pay even more when the advertising comes free. That's probably what Hustler magazine entrepreneur Larry Flynt is saying right now. He couldn't have asked for a better advertising campaign than the one he got when prosecutors all over the country were going after his magazine for what they considered violations of the "community standards" obscenity test. And it was all free--for him at least.

South Carolina, of course, was no exception. For several months during the first part of this year, a number of solicitors in our fair state were occupying themselves with getting Hustler and other magazines off the local newsstands and out of their respective areas.

Now Flynt must be laughing all the way to the bank. Recently released A.B.C. magazine circulation figures, according to a story in the Washington Post on May 2nd, show some interesting things about Hustler. In the six months since the last circulation count was taken, Hustler has been the biggest success story of all the magazines listed, including People magazine which is considered to be a circulation phenomenon among general interest magazines. While People gained nearly 300,000 readers in the six month period and moved from number 28 to 21 on the circulation list, Hustler gained an astounding half a million new readers and moved from number 37 all the way to 23 in the same period. A year ago, according to the same Post story, Hustler had a circulation of only 826,000 and was no. 62 on the list of leaders.

Now that's quite a success story--for Flynt that is. As far as the solicitors go, it's another story all together. While they managed to get a little publicity for themselves and their communities, they did little to stop the flow of Hustler. You can still go into any of those areas where all the hoopla took place and find any kind of magazine you want. You might have to look a little harder, but it can be found.

As for Larry Flynt? Oh, he's over in the counting house, counting out his money...

Charity begins with immunity

Dear Mr. Meadows:

I read with interest your column entitled "Living Nightmares" which was published in the April 22, 1977, issue of Osceola.

Currently, charitable hospitals and governmental hospitals are immune from any law suits resulting from improper medical attention because of the legal doctrines of charitable immunity and governmental immunity. Since such hospitals are immune from law suits there is no incentive for the hospitals to improve their services to prevent the type of inattention and unconcern you and many others experience in hospital emergency rooms.

Currently, there is a bill pending in the Legislature to enact a state tort claims act which would allow law suits against hospitals and other governmental agencies such as the Richland Memorial Hospital for failing to render proper medical care or for other acts of negligence. I hope your column will be read by all of the Legislators of the State of South Carolina and that your column will have some impact upon whether or not the citizens of this State are given a redress for their grievances. I would urge you to contact your Legislators to let them know that you support such an act and I would hope that other readers of Osceola would do likewise.

[illegible] before the South Carolina Supreme Court in which the Plaintiff asked the Court to change the law of South Carolina to allow suits against charitable hospitals for negligence of the hospital employees. The Court has not yet handed down a decision in that case. I am aware of no bill pending in the Legislature to change the law relating to charitable immunity. I would urge your readers to contact their Legislators also to request that such a bill be introduced and passed so that those who are injured as a result of charitable hospital employee negligence will have some method of collecting for their losses. Legal accountability is the best way to insure that proper care and attention are given.

O. Fayrell Furr, Jr.

Editor's note: On May 10 the S.C. Supreme Court ruled persons injured through acts of employes of charitable hospitals may sue "if the aggrieved party can establish that the injuries occurred because of the hospital's heedlessness and reckless disregard of the plaintiff's rights." Plaintiffs must demonstrate, however, that the injuries resulted from something more than simple negligence.

No obtrusive lessons

Take a man -- let him this time resemble George C. Scott -- cut his hair short and grizzled, weatherbeat his face and burn it red from wind and sun, grow a gray beard and keep it well-trimmed; call him "Papa;" have him live by the sea in some lonely region of Cuba or Bimini in a house "built solid as a ship;" the man is an artist, he works art out of scrap metal; the man is a hunter, with that natural healthy respect for life; the man is alone -- he has loved, and is loved, he has two wives and three children, but has exiled himself from them in a place "where people let you alone."

Far away, there is a world war going on; not far enough, ships are torpedoed at night within sight of his front porch, bodies wash ashore, the man's first wife (whom he says he loves) is to marry a general, their only son becomes a pilot and is killed. Thomas Hudson (is the man's name) resolves to give up his island. and vovage over these perilous waters to Key West and America; in the journey he takes on a stowaway whom he meant to leave behind, and the crew of a ship hit by the Germans or Cuban Coast Guard, and several Jewish refugees -- men, women, children -- fleeing the European Nazi invasion. All of these he assumes responsibility for; he breaks his exile from the human family, he makes full use of his life and experience.

Sound familiar? It's "Papa" Hemingway. Sound trite? It is, but there being only so many stories going on here on this planet, it is not up to us to condemn one before we see what the author has done with it.

Let's get this story into movie form, which is the form I'll be dealing with. (This also takes Hemingway off the hook, if that's where you want him.) Denne Bart Petitclerc has drawn liberally from the book Islands In the Stream, to write a screenplay that is his own. he shuffles the scenes he hasn't left out into different order, he compresses several characters into one character, he exchanges lines in dialogue between one character and another. In a crucial scene: Thomas Hudson and his first wife (Claire Bloom): she tells him that their son is dead. For anyone who has read the book, this sort of turnaround is unforgiveable, and confuses irreconcilably his interpretation of that scene.

But, one who has not read the book gets the feeling it is now unnecessary, having seen the movie, -- that the screenwriter has extracted the best stuff, and reworked it into a terse, thrilling two-hour visual adaptation. He has even done so with a taste for Hemingway's style: there are numerous short scenes with none or one or two lines spoken. Some of which are bound to come off ambiguous and of questionable value. One such is when Thomas Hudson and his servant Bobby/Joseph/Willie (take your pick) (Gilbert Roland) watch the boys (who have come for the summer) asleep. --"I wonder why Davy is afraid of the dark," says Thomas Hudson as he cuts the lamp down. --"Weren't you afraid of the dark?" replies Gilbert. --"No. As near as I can remember, I was never afraid of the dark. I was only afraid of dying."

Which brings me to the purpose of this review: of what use Hemingway? How does his realism serve us? It cannot be denied by anyone who sees this film that there is something to this character Thomas Hudson; he is not shallow. Underneath, he is an emotional man, a loving man but a man of restraint, a man of patience. He is a man who cannot or does not express his emotions: he can only say something is good or bad; no longer does he paint portraits, he can only contrive these scrap-iron monstrosities that will rust up in New York's Central Park and be misunderstood; when told of the death of his son, and Gilbert cries "Why'd they kill Tommy? Why?" the only explanation Thomas Hudson has is that Tommy's plane was shot down and his parachute caught fire. "I love you," Thomas Hudson can say to another person, but when they say it to him he doesn't know what to do; he feels guilty and obligated, that he ought to be doing something for that person, but what? That these kinds of commitments he ought to avoid.

When the hammerhead shark goes after Tommy, Thomas Hudson can't protect him, he panics and shoots out his ammo into the water; this is a very real representation of human frustration. Real enough, you might say, for Thomas Hudson, "Unto Him that loves us, and washed us from our sins in His Blood" -Rev. 1:5. "Almost all things are cleansed in Blood, and apart from the shedding of Blood, there's no forgiveness" -Heb. 9:22 "And when I (Jehovah) see the Blood I will pass over you." Ex. 12:13. The Blood washes away our guilt by accepting Jesus into our hearts - 1 Jn. 1:7, Acts 4:12.

Salvation (Sanctified): Achieved through the water-where our greed, ambitions, ego and pride are buried. -Rom. 6:4 "Therefore we are buried with Him through baptism unto death." This is the new birth of John 3:5: "Except a man be born of Water and Spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." Also, 1 Pet. 3:21: "...baptism does also now save us." And, "Repent and be baptised...in the NAME of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Salvation (Glorified): Acquired through the Fire: 1 Pet. 1:7 "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perishes, though it be tried in Fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Also, in Job 23:10 -"But He knows the way that I take; when He has tried me, I shall come forth as gold."

The Full Gospel: 1 Cor. 15:1-4 "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died (Justification) according to the scriptures: And that He was buried (sanctification), and that He rose again (Glorification) the third day according to the scriptures." This is the explanation of 1 Pet. 2:21 "(Christ) leaving us an example, that you should follow His steps."

The freezers of Calabash

by Scott Graber

GRAND STRAND——People go to Myrtle Beach for different reasons. There are people--few in number to be sure--who believe there is a beach here (reputedly located between the Wax Museum and the Water-Boggan). There are others in search of romance (''romance'' being a 72-hour relationship falling just short of meaningful). And there are those who travel to the Grand Strand to eat.

For those in the latter category--those seeking something more than candied apples and chili dogs--there is a place called Calabash.

Calabash is a small coastal community (150 people) located astride the state line. It takes about thirty minutes to drive the twenty-or-so miles separating Myrtle Beach and Calabash...and thousands (thousands?) of sun-burned, salivating people make this trip every night.

At last count there were twenty restaurants in this town Twenty restaurants with rather ordinary names like "Becks" and "Ella's Place." Names that bespeak the linoleum floors and formica tables that were a predictable feature of middle class dining twenty years ago. Predictable until "ambience" and "atmosphere" turned restaurants into train depots and ocean liners.

These restaurants serve shrimp, flounder, scallops and oysters to 27,000 people every weekend in the summer. The seafood is mostly fried and is served in eye-popping, gut-busting quantities--indeed the quantity seems to be a part of the legend. The other part of the legend is that the seafood is good and fresh and local. So good that last year 1.25 million people consumed 668,000 lbs. of flounder and 378,000 lbs. of shrimp in and around Calabash.

And why not? Calabash is a measure of authenticity flanked by the most explicit, unexpurgated commercialism in North or South Carolina. Calabash with its rotting wharves and live oaks is a respite from the beer, bump-em cars and bad taste that has come to symbolize the Grand Strand.

But even Calabash is not what it seems to be. The seafood is not caught locally and a lot of it is frozen.

One of Calabash's famed shrimp boats prepares for its daily trip to the blue Atlantic.

A fresh catch of fish, soon to become delicious Calabash seafood dinners.

Calabash restaurant brochure

"We get our shrimp from Louisiana," says Craig Campbell.

Campbell, a cook at the Calabash Seafood Barn, explained that the shrimp were "fresh frozen" and "your average customer can't tell any difference."

This same "public doesn't know the difference theme" was repeated by Vester Beck, a man who should know since he's been serving the public for 37 years.

"My deviled crabs come down frozen from Wilmington (North Carolina) and I get my soft-shells from Virginia."

The ocean perch come from Canada. The perch, like the scallops, are "fresh frozen" and come in 5 lb. boxes. And the public, if the numbers are accurate, can't tell the difference.

What is going on in Calabash is going on everywhere. It is easier to uncrate, unwrap and thaw, than it is to peel or scrape or scale or mash. With frozen foods you don't have to worry about seasons, about buying too much okra or too little beans. Technology unleashed on a bedazzled public by Ray Kroc and Howard Johnson is spreading, cancer-like, through the rest of the restaurant business.

But Calabash is on the ocean, and there are real shrimp boats tied up at real docks within sight of the restaurants.

"I've never gotten anything down there," says Craig Campbell. "I'm told that those boats sell to local people...but we buy from salesmen that come through. Those two boats can't feed 9,000 people every night."

The boats, like the formica and the linoleum, make a statement. The statement (illustrated and underscored in promotional material) is that most or all of your platter "spent the night in nearby waters." Chances are good that most of the shrimp, scallops, and crab spent the night in a refrigerated trailer bouncing in from Virginia, Louisiana or Texas. Much of the seafood, like most of the people who ultimately consume the seafood, spend the night on the road. Trucks and people converging on Calabash in order to transfer the "cargo."

Frozen food is becoming standard fare across the nation, and being wealthy doesn't help. Just because you can afford to pay $50.00 for your "Crab Imperiale" doesn't necessarily mean you have escaped frozen or precooked food.

The food processors have created "gourmet" dishes that cost $1.50 and sell for $7.50. A chef can purchase frozen steaks (complete with burned-on grill marks), frozen bread and frozen desserts. Many "good" restaurants "slush down" a day's supply of assorted meats and seafood, then pop the appropriate entree into the microwave when ordered.

"Breaded shrimp, oysters, and crabmeat specialties, lobster Newburg and Pompano are packed in attractive packages with four-color illustrations and tend to make a chef proud of preparing a gourmet entree," reports trade journal Quick Frozen Foods.

Other restaurants, like "Phineas" in Washington, D.C., have done away with cooks entirely. Cooks have been replaced by "thawer-outers" and "food processing systems." Rather than hire a cook (at $5.00 to $6.00 an hour), "Phineas" trains an individual to slice roast beef, or to apply secret sauce, or to do some other simple, frequently repeated task.

> "...Wait until June and buy your seafood on the dock. Otherwise send your compliments to the freezer."

"You can do the same thing with prime rib that you can to with hamburger," says Ronald C. Wornick, group vice president for food service at Clorox Co. "Fine quality food and ambience can be turned out just as predictably as McDonald's can turn out hamburger."

The variety and the adventure in American eating is coming to a rapid, humiliating end. Frozen, precooked and reconstituted food--and our quiet surrender to this reheated mush--is driving fresh foods from the menu. Surrender to the "salesmen" is removing regional variety. Can you get It takes time to find and to prepare fresh vegetables. It is expensive to cook from scratch. It is a nuisance to find a local fish market...and, as the owners tell us, the public doesn't know the difference.

A final note. If you must have your fish fresh, wait until the latter part of June for your meal at the beach. That's when our season opens and when our marshes and sounds come to life and deliver their bounty. Wait until June and buy your seafood on the dock. Otherwise, send your compliments to the freezer.

Basketball recruiting:

The number one evil in college basketball today is recruiting. Not all prep athletes are satisfied with a four year scholarship which includes the costs of tuition, room and board and books. Everyone has heard the stories about prep recruits receiving cars, money and other amenities to attend certain colleges. The pressure to produce a winner sometimes becomes so intense that coaches (and even alumni) step over the line. The well known and most recent example in this state occurred at Clemson University and the cloud caused by their violations of NCAA rules lingers on after two years.

As then Clemson coach Tates Locke (he has since been replaced by Bill Foster) told Basketball Weekly "I did cheat...I got tired of losing. It's as simple as that. I didn't do this (cheat) because the Joneses did or because it made me a big man. I did it simply because I didn't want to get beat anymore. That's all..."

Only last weekend the University of Hawaii was placed on a two-year basketball probation by the NCAA. The probation excludes Hawaii from post season play and all television appearances and the school was ordered to sever permanently any and all relations it may have with three former institutional staff members and six representatives of the university athletic interests. Other sanctions sometimes imposed by the NCAA, as for example in Clemson's case, include limitations upon the number of scholarships the school can award each year.

Former UCLA Coach John Wooden may have suggested the ultimate answer to violations when he recommended this year that the NCAA go further and ban an athlete involved in recruiting violations: "I have the feeling that if the athlete himself was made permanently ineligible for doing something illegal, we'd cut it down in a hurry."

On top of everything else there are strict NCAA rules that limit the number of times a coach may visit with a prospect and that limit to six the number of colleges a prep player may visit. Then, there is the freshman eligiblity rule that leads the high school athlete to ask the inevitable question: "Will I start?" It's easy to see why coaches pull their hair out or have ulcers or both from recruiting.

* * * * *

Even with all of the playgrounds and hoops, there are still only about a hundred or so premier-players each year who will turn a program around. And, of course, there is no guarantee that a prospect will develop into the player his press clippings indicate. By the same token, some may even surpass their advance notices. Often times the signing of a single All-American prospect can make a recruiting season, and indeed, hold the regular season in the balance. In the final analysis, it is recruiting that makes a program go from rags to riches or just from rags to rags.

Thusfar, South Carolina Coach Frank McGuire has recruited three very sound prep stars. Rich Wejnert signed early with the Gamecocks. Wejnert is a 6'7", 205 pound forward from St. Anthony High School in Ridgefield, N.J. who averaged 23.3 points and 17 rebounds per game. Wejnert was voted to Basketball Weekly's All-State team and is a member of McDonald's All-American High School Basketball Team. The selection to the prestigious McDonald's team placed Wejnert in the company of the Nation's top sixty basketball players. Wejnert cast his lot with USC after considering several other fine basketball programs including Oral Roberts, Cincinnati, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina State.

David Underwood, a 6'6" 210-pound forward from August Martin High School in New York City, averaged 24 points and 17 rebounds per game for the last three seasons. August Martin High School won the New York City Public School Championship this year. Underwood was a two-time All-New York City selection, and was an honorable mention All-American. He was named to Basketball Weekly's All-State team. Last summer, he was the top scorer at Garfinkel's Five-Star Camp, as well as being named best defensive player and winning the slam dunk contest. In two post season tournaments this spring, he scored 34 and 26 points respectively while being named to All-Tournament teams. McGuire said of Underwood: "He's been an outstanding player for three years at August Martin and we feel he has tremendous potential."

Zam Frederick, a dynamic 6'2", 175-pound guard has also joined the Gamecock fold. Frederick played an abbreviated schedule of 12 games this year due to the St. Matthews school boycott. He averaged 31 points per game with games of 44, 43 and 40. At St. Matthews, he played the second guard spot but has the ability to handle the ball. He was chosen to the South Carolina Basketball Coaches Association's Class AA all-state basketball team. Considered by Basketball Weekly as one of the top two seniors in the State this year, he was chosen to their All-State team. Frederick considered Davidson, Clemson, Maryland and Appalachian State before signing with U.S.C. He plans to polish his skills this summer in City League competition in New York and will attend one session of Garfinkel's Five-Star Camp.

Carolina graduated three seniors from last year's team. Nate Davis was the only starter, with Stu Klitenic seeing limited duty and Chuck Sherwood getting some late season playing time.

With Jim Graziano, Mike Doyle, Jackie Gilloon and Karlton Hilton returning, the Gamecocks have a good nucleus upon which to build. Graziano played center last year but may move to forward if Carolina can sign a big man. Currently, Coach McGuire is recruiting four "blue chip" big men in Criag Watts of Boston, Mass.; Dan Schayes, the 6'10" son of a former pro player Dolph Schayes; 6'10" Ron Wister; and Steven Hardy. McGuire has three scholarships available yet and it's no secret that he would like to give two of those to big men if possible.

Watts of Oliver Ames High School, a lanky 6'11", is the top college prospect among the big men in New England. Chosen among the top twenty-five in the East by one publication, Watts averaged over 24 points per game this year despite facing stacked defenses. He has remarkable ability and a shooting touch which resulted in a career field goal mark of .700 entering his senior season. As a junior he averaged 28.5 points per game. He was named to Basketball Weekly's 1977 All-State team.

Schayes, from Syracuse, N.Y., is an "A" student who has been heavily recruited and even though he is already ranked among the best in the country, his high school coach thinks he still may not have reached his full potential. Wister is also a five-star player who was recently named to Basketball Weekly's All-State team. Steven Hardy, named to the same team, was a major factor in Archbishop Malloy High School's successful season this year.

The "Gamecocks" are also still in the running for several other outstanding players in the likes of Ken Page, a 6'4" guard from Staten Island, N.Y. (a five-star prospect), Tracy Jackson, a 6'5" concensus All-American forward from Paint Branch High School in Burtonsville, Maryland and Kelly Tripuka, another consensus All-American 6'6" forward from Bloomfield, N.J. Page has been selected to several All-American teams, averaging over 30 points per game, and he is considered to be a good defensive player. Both Tripuka and Jackson were selected to Parade Magazine's Third Team All-American Squad and to Basketball Weekly's Fourth Team All-American list. They are both considered to be in the top 25 players in the country.

Tripuka, who has averaged over 30 points and 20 rebounds a game, is the son of Frank Tripuka, a former All-American at Notre Dame. Tripuka is said to be considering Notre Dame and U.S.C. as well as several other schools. In addition, Osceola has learned that Albert King, everybody's consensus All-American, is still undecided about where to go to school and has visits left and may decide to visit U.S.C. Although most of the experts say that the chances of his picking U.S.C. are slim, if he visits the chances have to be increased, if just ever so slightly.

There is no doubt that Carolina needs to sign a big man to take some of the rebounding pressure from Graziano's shoulders. Several "ifs" could make the difference for the Gamecocks next year. If Carolina can sign the right big man, Graziano, who recently received honorable mention All-Freshman honors from Basketball Weekly, can be moved to forward--his natural position. If Hilton, an All-American selection in junior college, can continue to adjust to major college basketball, the Gamecocks will have a sturdy force in the front court that they need. With Doyle and Gilloon in the backcourt combining as they did towards the end of last season the backcourt will be stabilized.

The big "if," of course, for next year continues to be the missing big man--someone to play consistently and to clog up the center. Last season was inordinately long for Carolina basketball fanatics and with a little luck, quality coaching and another recruit or two, next season might not seem so long.

"...'what hurts most is to say good-bye to a prospect knowing he has been impressed with his visit, knowing he likes your school and his chances to play. Then you get the letter or telephone call, or maybe nothing at all and you learn he has gone somewhere else'..."

U.S.C.'s McGuire

Clemson

Elsewhere around the State, the Clemson Tigers lost 7'1" Tree Rollins and 6'10" Dave Brown via graduation. Coach Bill Foster hopes that 6'9", 250 pound center John "Moose" Campbell, of Anderson Junior College, will fill the void left by Rollins in the middle. Campbell played only one year of high school basketball, averaging 22 points and 18 rebounds per game. At Anderson Junior College, Campbell scored 17.2 points and pulled down 12.4 rebounds per game, while hitting 70 per cent of his shots from the floor.

Foster signed a second junior college student last week. Billy Williams, a 6'4", 205 pound guard-forward earned All-American honors in both high school and college and in his last season at Brevard Community College in Cocoa, Florida, Williams scored 23 points per game.

Foster is reportedly still recruiting three blue chip players including 6'10" Gil Salinas, 6'10" Craig Watts and 6'3" Ken Matthews. The signing of any one of them can make the recruiting season successful for the Tigers. Even without freshman help, Clemson has plenty of quality players from last year returning and should be a formidable foe.

Furman

Coach Joe Williams has signed three players, thus far-two from Anderson College. Rodney Arnold, a 6'4" swing man, was one of the top scorers in Tennessee prep history and on the All-State team. Arnold averaged 35.7 points and 12 rebounds per game with a high of 54 points in one game. Williams calls Arnold, "a great shooter, with excellent moves to the basket, and an excellent passer."

Dale Crowe, a 5'11" guard, scored 6.6 points per

Herb Buhl is Osceola's resident basketball guru. He replaces the missing Jim Walser, to offer his expertise in this special to Osceola.

Rags to riches, or rags to rags?

Several prep All-Americans have not yet selected the college of their choice. They will be freshman of influence.

Albert King --A 6'7" forward from Brooklyn, New York's Fort Hamilton High School. King, everyone's choice for player of the year, averaged 39 points and 22 rebounds per game while shooting .620 from the field. He scored 2,068 career points in over 60 games. King has been a three-time All-American (Osceola, April 22).

Ken Matthews --A 6'3" guard from Dunbar High School, Washington, D.C. averaged 24.9 points per game his senior year with a high of 51 points (22-33) in one game. His Coach says he can "shoot in a hurricane." Garfinkel adds, "got to be the best shooter in the nation, more consistent shot than Jo Jo Hunter (Maryland) but without the flash." Consensus All-American.

Darnell Valentine --6'1" blue chip guard from Wichita Heights, Kansas. One of the best guards to come out of Kansas since Lucius Allen and probably better. May be the best guard in the nation, averaging 26.2 points per game with 128 assists and 111 steals for the year. Shot 54% from the field. On everyone's first-team, All-American squad Superscout Dave Bones said of Valentine, "creative, jet quick and penetrates astoundingly, gives it up wisely and is almost an offense by himself. Will pulverize any press." Top player at Garfinkel's Five-Star Camp.

Earvin Johnson --6'8" First team All-American from Everett High School, Lansing, Michigan. Johnson averaged 31 points and 17 rebounds per game. He shared Parade Magazine's "player of the year" award with Banks and King. Smooth and fluid enough to play back court. His coach calls him "an unselfish player who can totally dominate any game."

First team Basketball Weekly All-American. Considering Michigan or Michigan State.

Gil Salinas --A slender 6'10" center from San Antonio, Texas's Burbank High, considered the number one senior in Texas. Parade Magazine's third team All-American and McDonald's All-American team. Once blocked 22 shots in a game, good speed, a good shooting touch, an A minus student. Recruited heavily by Clemson and Notre Dame.

Ken Page -6'4" guard from Staten Island, New York. Considered one of the best guards in the East. Averaged 30 points and 16 rebounds per game as a junior. Good defensive player, named to McDonald's team, and Parade's 4th Team All-American.

Craig Watts --6'10" center, Oliver Ames High School, Northeastern, Massachusetts. Highly rated (See South Carolina), 5-Star players. Best big man in New England.

Ray Talbert -6'9" Anderson, Indiana, consensus All-American averaged 25.2 points per game.

Herb Williams -6'10" center, Columbus, Ohio. Averaged 24.3 points per game, All-American.

Artie Green -6'0" Bronx, N.Y. 20.1 points per game. One of the best guards in New York City.

Danny Vranes -6'7" forward Salt Lake City, Utah. Averaged 23 points per game.

George Ratkovich -6'0" guard Alahambra, California.

Kelly Tripuka -6'6" forward, Bloomfield, N.J. Prolific scorer.

Reggie Hannah -6'8" Titusville, Florida, Best big man in Florida this year.

Larry Petty -6'10" Power Memorial High School, New York, N.Y. Great defensive player.

Bobby Cattage -6'9" Huntsville, Alabama.

game for Anderson College while handing out 11 assists and avering 4 steals per game. An excellent leader on the fast break he should see action as point guard. Al Daniel, a 6'4" guard, from Anderson College has also signed with the Paladins. With Strickland, Moore, Grimm, Woods, etc.al. returning, Williams should be looking forward to next year.

North Carolina State

North Carolina State's line-up next year will have a completely new look. Three players have already made plans to transfer to other schools: Steve Walker and Dirk Ewving and Brian Walker, a 6'2" prep All-American. "I think I had a decent year here but I think I can improve myself if I can go somewhere where I can play point guard," said Walker. Considering that the whole Walker family had moved to Raleigh from Lebannon, Indiana to watch Steve and Brian play, that decision could not have been made lightly. Add to this, the fact that Kenny Carr has placed his name in the NBA hardship draft to be held June 10-it's easy to see why the State may struggle to match last year's record even with "Hawkeye" Whitney, Clyde Austin etc. al. back.

Last year Coach Norm Sloan, recruited a freshman group rated in the top five in the nation, but so far his success has not repeated itself. He lost the battle for 6'9" All-American Wayne McKoy, but he has signed a 7-footer in 7'1" Chuck Nevitt of Marietta, Georgia. Nevitt, at 190 pounds may need strength and experience before he can help. State has also recruited Donnie Perkins, a 6'3" guard from North Pitt High School in Bethel, North Carolina. He averaged 24 points, 12 rebounds and six assists per game. Perkins was chosen to Basketball Weekly's All-State team. Pete Keefer a 6'2" guard from Baltimore, Maryland has also signed a grant in aid. These new recruits are supposed to be "blenders" who will blend in with State's All-Star players. Sloan reportedly wants to sign seven players this year.

Wake Forest

Coach Carl Tracey has signed Fran McCaffrey, a 6'4" point guard from Philadelphia. McCaffrey was Philadelphia's Catholic player of the year, averaging 17 points and 10 rebounds per game. He will help replace the loss of Skip Brown. Tracey is reportedly recruiting a big man in Justin Ellis of Washington, D.C., and has also signed Wilbert Singleton, a 6'6" forward from Sumter, South Carolina—one of top two seniors in S.C. this year. He averaged over 20 points and 10 rebounds per game. Called by his coach "a complete player, good defensive and offensive ability," he was named to the class AAAA-State team; Parade Magazine's 4th team All-American and McDonald's All-American squad.

Maryland

Lefty Drissell has only recruited one player at this point, Greg Manning, guard from Shelton, Pa. Of course, Drissell looked like he was in desparate trouble last year until he signed prep stars Jo Jo Hunter, Bill Bryant and Mike Davis near the end of the recruiting season.

North Carolina

Last year, coaches recruiting prep prospects heard so many times "Dean Smith, the next Olympic Coach," had been there that they began to cringe. That sales pitch worked so well, that North Carolina recruited what most accounts recognized as the best freshman group in the country last year. This is not an Olympic year, but finishing 2nd in the NCAA's hasn't hurt Smith's efforts. Smith has signed Pete Budko, a 6'9" 210 pound blue chip prospect from Loyola high School in Baltimore, Maryland and Al Wood a 6'6" 185 pound All Star forward from Gray, Georgia. Wood averaged 33 points, 17 rebounds and 5 assists per game with a .570 field goal percentage. He had a high of 49 points and quick is enough and a good enough ball handler to be a weak side guard. Rated one of 10 best players in the nation, Wood is considered a consensus All-American.

Budko is also a quality player; named to Basketball Weekly's 4th team All-American list, Parade Magazine's 3rd team All-American Squad and led the McDonald's All-American team. The son of a former pro player, Walt Budko of the Baltimore Bullets, he led his high school team to the Catholic League Crown last year and he won the outstanding player award at Garfinkel's June, 1976 Five-Star Camp. Budko should be able to help in the front line spot bacated by the graduation of Walter Davis. UNC lost the services of Steve Krafciscin as he has decided to play closer to home and will be transferring to the university of Iowa. Smith is reportedly still pursuing the services of Darnell Valentine, a 6'1" guard from Kansas, considered by some to be the best guard prospect in the country.

Virginia

Two weeks ago, it looked like a long hot summer for Terry Holland. All that has been changed as Virginia signed Jeff Lamp, a 6'5" swing man from Kentucky's number one Louisville Ballard High School in Louisville, Kentucky. Lamp, Kentucky's "Mr. Basketball," averaged 24.1 points, 12.2 rebounds and 5.1 assists per game while shooting .634 from the floor and .862 from the line. His high school coach Dick Schmidt called him the "most talented player ever at Ballard High School...super hands...picturesque shot looks a lot like Jerry West." Lamp has to be considered among the ten best prep players in the country, being chosen to Parade Magazine's First team, Basketball Weekly's second team, and McDonald's first team All-American lists.

Virginia made a clean sweep of Ballard High School as they also signed 6'5" Lee Raker described as a hard nosed "white Adrian Dantley." In addition, Ballard Coach, Dick schmidt, is still considering an offer as an Assistant coach at U.V.A. Holland has also signed, Jeff Klein, a 6'5" forward from Stowe, Ohio; Kenny Hall, a 6'3" guard averaging 21 p.p.g. from Atlanta and Tom Hicks, who has transferred from Tulane. Add these freshman to returnees, Iavaronni, Castellan and Fulton and you can see why it won't be a long hot summer after all.

Duke

Duke's Bill Foster would have had a super year if he had signed only one of the players he has signed--Gene Banks. Banks, a 6'6" 210 pound forward from West Philadelphia High School has been called the best prep player from Philadelphia since Wilt Chamberlain. Last year he averaged 22.3 points and 18 rebounds per game with a .590 field goal shooting percentage. He has scored 53 points in a game, and had 28 rebounds and 12 assists per game. The accolades are endless. Superscout Dave Bones calls him the number one player in the country. "When it comes to rebounding, there is no one better at his size in the country outside of the NBA," says Bones. Banks is a three-time Basketball Weekly All-America. He shared Parade Magazine's "player of the year" award with Albert King. He was recruited by over 300 schools and considered N.C. State, UNC, UCLA, Michigan and Notre Dame before signing with Duke. Alumni and students deluged Bank's with letters to get him to come to Duke. Most experts feel that the name Gene Banks will be heard from for the next decade.

Foster has also recruited 6'7" Kenny Dennard, an All-State forward from Walnut Cove, N.C. and Jim Suddarth a 6'6" guard who averaged 27 points per game at Atlanta's Woodward Academy. Two transfers from North Carolina Central, 6'3" Bob Bander and 6' John Harrell will be eligible for guard slots. Duke may be a contender again with "ACC Rookie of the Year" Mike Gminski and 6'5" Sparnarkel returning for next year.

So that's the way it lines up for next year. In three or so weeks all the "ifs" will be answered for next year. All that will be left is what each individual coach can mold from the players he has managed to draw to his side. There may be a few who will decide to hold out for longer than that, but for all practical purposes the only game left will be the waiting game.

J. Christ, Director

Sir:

Praise the Lord (or the deity of one's choice) for Ed Meadow's perceptive exposition on the disdainful state of affairs of modern organized religion. Having been born and reared in the Bible Belt, I am painfully aware of the hypocrisies inherent in the current system. Mr. Meadows quite succinctly expresses the emotions I have felt for many years.

One interesting recent trend followed by numerous denominational groups is the practice of employing trust funds for the purpose of purchasing blocks of corporate stock, presumably to exert their divine influence on the demons of Big Business. Yet one can be sure that if threatened with the loss of their tax-exempt status the church leaders would vehemently invoke the constitutional guarantee of separation of church and state. Mr. Meadows supposes that if Christ returned to earth today, he would be appalled by current religious philosophies. Probably so, but after a while in the avaricious grips of today's church leaders; he might well be sitting on the board of AT&T.

Legislative resentment

Sir:

Ed Meadows' column "Meddling With the University" in the April 1, 1977 issue of Osceola states correctly that the average legislator harbors a not-so-subtle resentment towards the university faculty (has Ed been reading The Anti-Capitalistic Mentality by Ludwig von Mises when no one has been looking?)

The members of any legislature tend to have a rather well-developed inferiority complex when confronted by someone who has taken full advantage of the opportunities available. Their resultant willingness to "get even" will, if not denounced often and loudly, lead to the destruction of individual rights in the name of "equality."

As ever,

CINEMA

but for me? Am I supposed to identify with him? Yes, but it's hard; Hemingway (or Petit-clerc, or Scott) has made Thomas Hudson so real, so believable, so human, so unique, it tends to exclude the viewer from such identification. We think Thomas Hudson so very complex and different that we have no chance of understanding what is going on inside him, we are afraid to try to compare him to ourselves. And we are left out, when in the end Hudson says "I have discovered there is no single truth. It's all true." We say What? and can do no more than simply look at what and where that truth appears to be. Thomas Hudson knows it is impossible to communicate such abstractions; he says "I wish I could tell others what I've learned;" but his story ends, and we remain, human and hopeless.

The film is beautifully photographed, up to the final aerial shot of Hudson's boat on the ocean. Any director worth salt could get beautiful shots out of this location. The red mahoghany of the boat against the blue sea, black man on white sand, etc., are all effectively played upon. The interior of the house is right -- rich golds and reds, fire- and lamp-lit, soft focus, security against the outside, and coexistence with the sea. The only tricks are at the end -- overexposure, a dream sequence. Not detrimental.

This one's just the right length. Have a look and see if you like it. I liked it, but can honestly say I didn't get anything out of it I'll remember tomorrow -- maybe that's why it's good. Pretty pictures, action =entertainment. And no obtrusive lessons to be learned.

--S. Folks

OS QUOTABLE

"Prosperity without community responsibility is just as dangerous as social order without guarantees of freedom and equal opportunity. When abundance can be seen as more than an end in itself, as a means to social harmony, it can take on new dignity."

Cinema

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

"French Postcard" and "Hot Oven" are two new X-rated features beginning continuous runs at 11 a.m.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790.

Playboy production's sex-spoof on Alice in Wonderland, "Through the Looking Glass" and "Expose Me Lovely" are two X-rated features beginning continuous runs at 11 a.m.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011.

The Carolina begins a triple-feature week this weekend with more exorcism grue including "Abby," "Devil Within Her" and "Black Exorcist."

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"The Car" begins its Columbia run at two Columbia theatres. It's supposedly a spooky pix about a possessed car.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

Mel Brooks' "Young Frankenstein" continues in Columbia at the Columbia East Two Theatre. It's a comedy spoof on the old horror tale.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"Young Frankenstein" is so good that two theatres are featuring it, right? Well, two features are featuring it. It's Mel Brooks' comedy spoof of the old standby.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"Islands in the Stream," the adaption of the Ernest Hemingway book continues at Dutch Square. George C. Scott stars.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212.

"Annie Hall," Woody Allen's new flick continues for what will probably be a long engagement. It stars Woody and his favorite Diane Keaton and is well worth seeing.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Silver Streak" continues for what may turn out to be the longest comedy run on record in Columbia. It stars Gene Wilder and Richard Pryor.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Cousin Cousine," won several foreign film awards and its star, Marie-Christine Barrault, was nominated in this country for best actress at the Academy Awards.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731.

Paul Newman's new picture about hockey, "Slapshot," continues for another week downtown.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 779-0826.

"Black Sunday" lives on for at least another week. It stars Robert Shaw and Bruce Dern and it's rated R. Showtimes for this one are 2:15, 5:15 and 8:15 p.m.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 765-0282.

"Moonshine County Express" with William Conrad (TV's Cannon) and John Saxon begins at this downtown theatre. It's rated PG and showtimes are 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960.

"The Car" also appears at this downtown theatre. There seems to be a lot of possession movies in town and this one is all about a possessed car, which granted, is a new twist.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

Double feature time with Henry Winkler and Sylvester Stallone in "Lords of the Flatbush" and a second feature with no name stars called "Drive-In." Both are rated PG.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

"Rocky" continues for another week at Richland Mall. It stars Sylvester Stallone in his own screenplay and was voted by the Academy Awards as the best picture of last year. Showtimes are 2:30, 4:45, 7 and 9:15 p.m.

Theatre

Stage South, the state theatre for South Carolina, will conduct auditions for its 12-week fall educational tour Saturday, May 14th in Columbia.
